A SPECIAL SECTION IN FOOD WORLD/FOOD TRADE NEWS, MAY 2024

A Message From Jonathan Weis, Chairman, President And CEO

Jonathan Weis

At Weis Markets, I have the privilege of working alongside a talented and highly motivated group of people and I am grateful for their support and commitment to our customers and each other.

In recent years, our team has persevered through challenges we could have never imagined in 2019. Yet, we continued to grow and make progress in an intensely competitive marketplace.

Today, we are determined to build on our success by offering a strong combination of quality, service and everyday value. As part of this process, we are focused on our ongoing growth program and continual upgrades to our stores.

In 2024, we plan to make record investments. We expect to begin work on six new stores, numerous remodels and fuel centers along with thousands of smaller store projects that will enhance customer experience and improve efficiencies. In addition, we will continue to invest in technologies that help us efficiently manage our business and serve our customers.

In recent years, we have worked hard to help customers save money through our Low, Low Price (LLP) program, which offers strong everyday values on more than 10,000 of our best-selling grocery, produce and frozen items. It's also a great sales-building program that we will continue to expand in the coming year.

And finally, a big thanks to all the suppliers, vendors and partners who help us serve our customers. We appreciate the support and look forward to working with you in the years ahead.

Q&A With Kurt Schertle, Chief Operating Officer

Kurt Schertle

Food Trade News/Food World: What do you believe have been the most important elements towards establishing the excellent culture currently at Weis Markets?

Kurt Schertle: It starts from the top with Jonathan Weis. And candidly, I think it relates to the overall respect that our people have for each other. It's nothing for Jonathan to walk into my office or those of a category manager or district manager or (SVP-operations) David Gose's office and for us to collectively have an impromptu conversation where we're picking each other's brains. It's collaborative and helps create a strong organizational culture.

It also helps when you have an excellent group of store managers who provide leadership and build associate morale in our stores. As we like to say, we're big enough to have a little critical mass, but we're small enough that between myself, David and Jonathan, we know every store manager's name and as many department heads as possible.

Food Trade News/Food World: As the grocery industry continues to evolve, what are you prioritizing to keep Weis in the leadership and growth position that you currently enjoy?

Kurt Schertle: We're deliberate in our decision-making and are not 'bleeding edge.' There are times when we need to act quickly while at other times, we choose to observe what others in the industry are doing. Larger retail chains can try out 10 things, and if eight of them fail, they simply move on to the next thing.

As a regional operator, we need to be more deliberate since we can't afford to get two initiatives right and eight wrong. We have less margin for error compared to Walmart or Kroger.

This collaborative approach has helped us. Consider e-commerce. Several large retailers built micro-fulfillment centers (MFCs) during the pandemic when the e-comm business surged. But when customers returned to shop in-store, these same retailers were forced to close some if not most of their MFCs.

Our deliberate approach helped us avoid this trap which saved us a lot of money and heartache. Instead of spending money on a shiny, new toy, we could use that capital to grow and invest in our people and our stores.

Food Trade News/Food World: Is there one specific priority that Weis needs to focus on?

Kurt Schertle: We're always focusing on store-level execution. It's more difficult than ever, but we have to keep plugging away. I think what our team has done in developing our talent pool by utilizing hiring centers in all our geographies has been a huge success.

People development is more important than ever and I think our store operations team, led by David Gose, has done an outstanding job in this area. They've found new ways to train and develop associates, particularly younger ones. We've also invested in technologies that make us more efficient and gives us the flexibility we need to successfully manage our business.

Food Trade News/Food World: Let's talk about cap-ex investments. Weis has been very aggressive for many years consecutively in increasing your capital budget annually. Most of that investment has gone toward new stores, remodeling stores and other store improvements with some spending directed toward technology. Do you expect this trend to continue? Will there be other priorities in terms of how you will invest money in the future?

Kurt Schertle: We need to grow and we want acquisitions. It's no secret that acquisitions and for that matter, remodels, go to your bottom line a lot faster than 'ground-up' projects. Our goal is to strike the right balance.

Will our cap-ex spending stay at record levels? It depends on the circumstances. I see it being a record when we're able to buy a 20, 25, 30, 40-store chain. Perhaps less so in other years when we aren't. But year in, year out, we're still making significant investments in our growth and the continuous upgrade of our stores.

Let's be clear: we remain a buyer, not a seller. We're always out there looking. There's a lot of consolidation in the industry and we have the resources to capitalize on the right opportunities.

Food Trade News/Food World: Sustainability - it's become an important component in any successful retailer's business plan. What is Weis doing to support sustainability, both at the headquarters and in the stores?

Kurt Schertle: We've made steady progress on our sustainability program since we formally started it in 2008. The key has been aligning it with our business processes, which makes it easier to ingrain it in our culture.

We recycled an enormous amount of cardboard and plastic in 2023. In addition, we recycled, reused or repurposed 53 percent of our waste that would have otherwise gone to landfills. But it needs to be helpful to our business. When there's a successful payback, it's generally more accepted and done faster.

Here's a good example. Our stores now have LED lighting, which is more energy efficient. It was a major investment and took four years to complete with a three-year payoff in terms of reduced energy costs. The savings are substantial. There are other benefits as well. LED lighting extends the life of our remodels because it makes our stores and products look good.

Here's another one. In all our remodels, our dairy cases get doors. We also have doors for our CPG produce and bagged salads. Every frozen item is sold behind doors - no more coffin cases. Since we have doors on our refrigerators and freezers at home, why not do it in our stores? Ultimately, this helps reduce our refrigerant emissions and decrease their impact on the ozone layer and climate change.

It also reduces our energy costs. Ultimately, we want our sustainability program to benefit the communities we serve in a way that makes it more efficient and helps us reduce our costs.

Food Trade News/Food World: Can you provide an overview of the company's current charitable efforts and community involvement?

Kurt Schertle: One of our most important learnings happened during COVID when we started our 'round up' program. Our customers have been amazing in contributing without any pressure to do so. The average 'round up' is 43 cents. It goes 100 percent to charitable organizations and non-profits including schools, regional food banks, first responders, pediatric health programs and veteran groups - more than a thousand overall.

We're also adding our own donations to what we collect from our customers. Customers want to know we're in this together.

Food Trade News/Food World: What's your view of the importance of having a strong online presence? Is more investment needed or has the digital portal reached the saturation point?

Kurt Schertle: We've steadily invested in e-comm and are doing well with it. But we're not focused on building MFCs. We fulfill orders in-store and offer customers more choices. Today, we offer curbside pickup and delivery through Instacart, Shipt, DoorDash, Amazon and Uber Eats.

We want to meet customer expectations and do it profitably. Retailers and third parties clearly understand the challenges and are making better decisions these days. On a future growth basis, it's likely to grow a bit more, but it's clear that many people prefer a brick-and-mortar store.

Food Trade News/Food World: Thank you.
